Continuing the Little League tradition of making it "safer for the kids."

Warwick: A Winning Community

2007 ASAP Award Winners Honored: League representatives were brought to Williamsport, Pa., to honor their contribution to safety awareness for developing and implementing the best safety plans in the country this year. From left are the regional winners: West – Reno, Nev., Little League, Paul Piscoran and Steve Boucher; East and National winner – Warwick, RI, Little League, Jeff Reid and Tom Dwyer; South – Southside Little League, Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., Fifi DeLuca and Robin Terrill; and Central – Hopkins, Minn., Area Little League, Mike Pavelka and Sarah Goeman. Not present are the Southwest Region winners, from Taft, TX, Little League.

Warwick National Little League puts it all together to win the First Place Prize: A Musco Light-Structure Green™ System

Five years ago, Jeff and Paula Reid stepped up to be joint safety officers for Warwick, R.I., National Little League. They may not have known what they were getting into, but they knew they wanted to make a difference in their community, and increase everyone's safety.

While board members and even league presidents changed around them, they stayed with their chosen task. Their efforts were noticed and supported, although it took time. "The better we got at what we were doing, the more the board supported us," explained Paula. Now the entire league carries safety awareness forward, not just the pair of safety officers. Last year Warwick National Little League was selected as having the best safety plan in the East Region; this year it was best in the nation.

Talking to Jeff, Paula, and league president Tom Dwyer, you get a sense that they won the best safety plan from a commitment the entire league shared: a deep-rooted concern for their players, volunteers and everyone who comes to watch a game. Their safety plan is rooted around training that spreads that commitment to all levels of the league.

Beginning from Others' Ideas

Jeff admitted when they started their safety program several years ago, they were just looking for good ideas from others, and using another league's plan as a base for their own. While safety plans do not have to be original, leagues do have to implement what they put in writing, so tailoring the plan became the first task the pair took on. And tailor it they did.

When the league began with CPR training, it was for anyone interested, but not required. As people relayed how helpful the training was, the board expanded the offering to more volunteers. Since it cost to send volunteers to the training, this was an important step for the league.

Since then – as just one small part of their overall plan, but showing the trend for training and equipment upgrades – the league has made CPR training mandatory and purchased an AED. The AED is immediately available in case of the rare but too often fatal result of sudden cardiac arrest or a disruption of the heart's normal beating pattern.

Training is Key to Success

One of the main highlights of the league's plan was their truly comprehensive fundamentals and first aid training program. In all, the league provided six training sessions for coaches and players, with a variety of instructors, for different divisions' ability levels. Sessions included standard skills, positive coaching, running a practice and how to involve parents. Tom's wife Pam Dwyer coordinates the Team Parents in separate sessions on the basics of safety, even how to handle "problem" parents so they don't detract from the players' experience.

The league uses a local resource, the Rhode Island Baseball Institute, to help put on some of its training. They use the indoor facility during the winter months to get players and coaches properly trained. They also used league coaches to "get all the coaches on the same page," Jeff explained.

Building 'Community' in League

"Our goal isn't to 'beat' the other team, it's to increase the abilities of all the players," stated President Tom Dwyer. This wasn't always the case, he said, as many in the past in their league subscribed more to a "win at all costs" approach than working to develop all players. But as new board members worked to bridge gaps between teams and create an environment where the players' needs came first, more coaches stepped up to help and lend their knowledge of the game, and more bridges were built.

"Once you get everyone to buy in to the overall plan, you develop that feeling of community," Tom noted, that everyone is working toward a common goal, both in safety issues and in overall league philosophy.

In their Field, Health and Safety Days, in case of emergency the Warwick National Little League provided players' parents with fingerprints and a photo of their child, handled by the Warwick Police Department; a dental records chart; and a videotape of their child with identifying marks from the Child Identification Program by the local Rhode Island Freemasons.

During this event, they also used ball players from the nearby Johnson and Wales University. "It's the way they interact with the kids" working on fundamentals appropriate to age, and keeping kids interested and learning, Jeff said. The baseball players from JWU even wrote letters to the league and players afterward, expressing how much they themselves had gotten out of the experience and praising the effort they saw in the youngsters.

"You're trying to teach them baseball, but you're also teaching them life," Tom explained.

A Safety Commitment

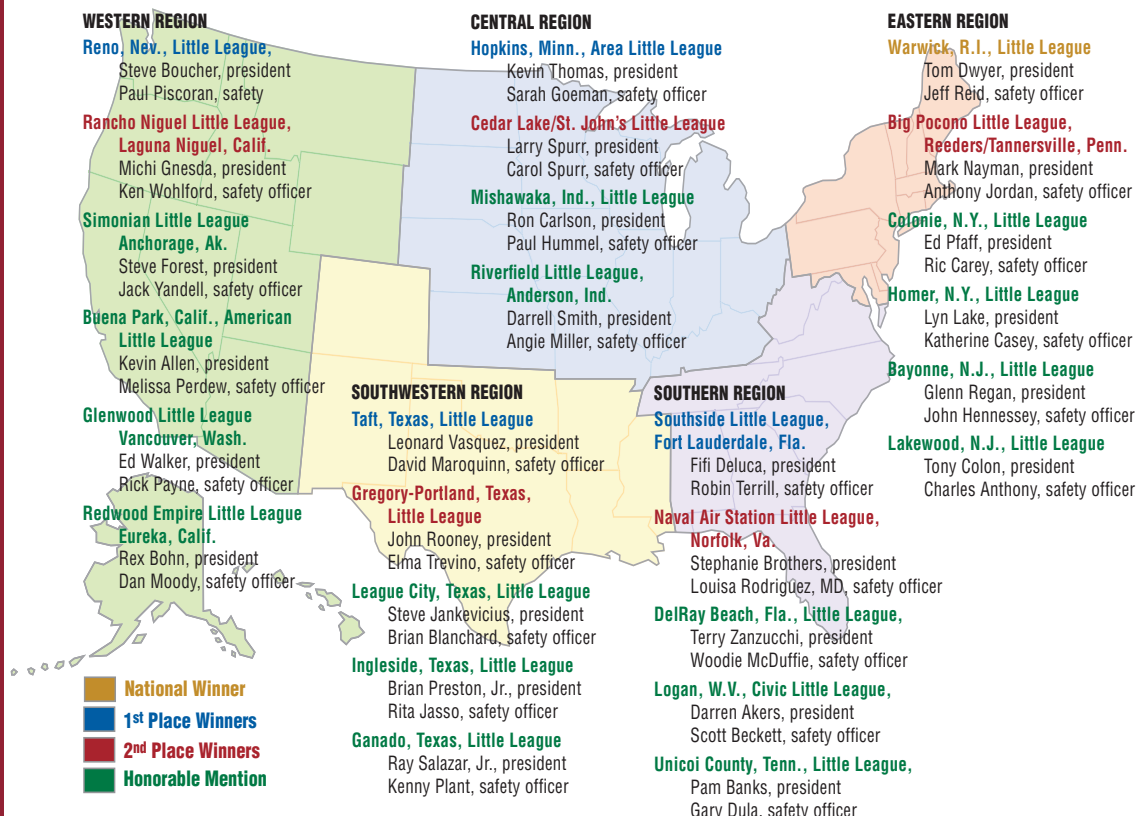

"It wasn't the three of us that did this, it was the league that did this," explained Jeff. And the entire league showed through in their plan, from the board requirements to the player safety posters and parent involvement.

Even players understand they can help improve safety every day. "One of the coaches' sons emailed the team from Wallpole, Mass., (during the World Series games) and finished his message with 'Play fair, have fun and be safe,'" Jeff related. "His dad asked him why he put that, and he said, 'Aren't we down here because of safety?' So when I say people are buying into it, it's not just the adults, it's the kids, too.

"This is five of the best years of my life right here," Jeff concluded, looking at the safety manual and the group in general. "Five of the best years of my life."

2007 National ASAP Safety Plan Winners

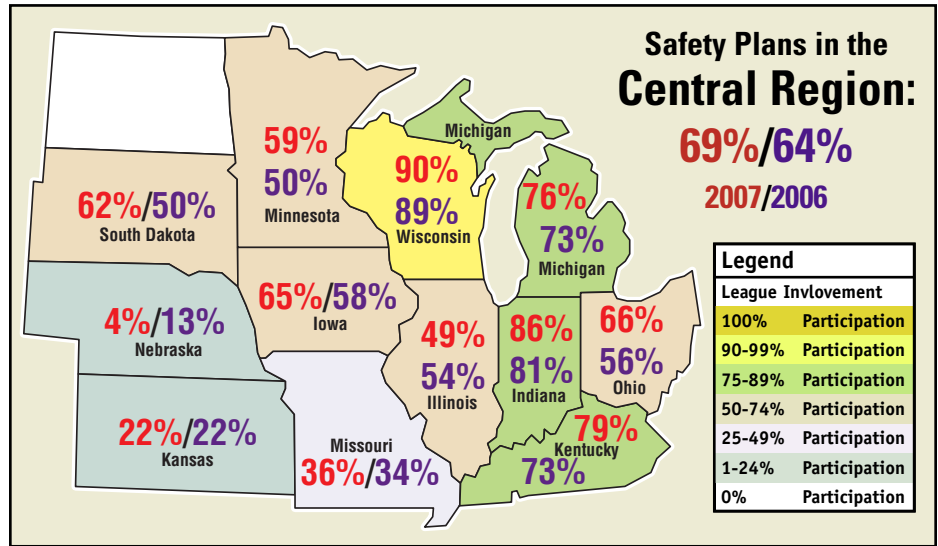

Central Region climbs to 69%

In 2007, 245 of the just over 500 District Administrators in the US are in the 90-100 percent level of safety participation. That's fantastic! The award for 2007 earned by leagues and districts from ASAP co-sponsor AIG Insurance was: $47,200 for the District Early Incentive, and $610,879 for the league cash award based on leagues' numbers of teams. The total award earned by districts and leagues for 2007 was over $658,000.

A Few Ideas from Safety Plans

Activities/Education

Some parents seem to abandon good principles of child rearing when their child is participating in sports. However, just as your child's home, school, and religious environment affect the type of person he or she will be, so does the sport environment especially when your child is young.

Remember this:

If children live with criticism,
they learn to condemn.

If children live with hostility,
they learn to fight.

If children live with fear,
they learn to be apprehensive.

If children live with praise,
they learn to like themselves.

If children live with recognition,
they learn to have a goal.

If children live with honesty,
they learn what trust is.

Equipment/Education

Sliding Safety – The following can make the learning period safer:

- Long grass has been found to be better than a sand or sawdust pit to teach sliding.
- The base must not be anchored down.
- Sliding pads are recommended.
- The player should make approaches at half speed and keep constantly in mind that hands and feet should be in the air.
- Once committed to slide the player must not change strategy. Last minute hesitation causes most sliding injuries.
- Tennis shoes are suggested for beginning sliding and tagging practice to avoid injury to the defensive player.
- If the ground along the baselines becomes soft on a rainy day, such weather offers an excellent opportunity to have sliding drills.
- It should be kept in mind that head-first sliding is not allowed except when returning to a base.

Activities/Education

Managers must devote one pre-season practice to discussion of traffic, bicycle, and transportation safety appropriate to the level of children on that manager's team.
